“When I think back to the days I first fell in love with the grocery business, it’s not just the products I remember; it’s the experiences, conversations, hand-shakes and how-are-ya’s we all shared. Family, friends, and familiar faces all lined-up and ready to connect. Back then, it was more about relationships than transactions. You walked in, walked around, hugged a few necks, shook a few hands, and got home — with a better story to tell and a reason (other than just groceries) to come back over and over again. It was authentic. It was true. It was consistent, but never really the same. And that’s why we’re here. We’re moving forward by looking back. And we can’t wait to serve you and your family.”
